Overview

Sean McCalip is a trial lawyer whose practice encompasses a broad range of civil litigation, including the resolution of complex business, commercial and product liability disputes, before state and federal courts, mediations and arbitrations, and administrative hearings and proceedings. He also represents insurance companies' insured customers in a variety of claims.

Sean also devotes a portion of his practice to representing individuals in domestic family law matters, including divorce proceedings, complex business valuations and asset and debt apportionment, spousal and child support, custody and visitation issues, and guardianship.

Sean graduated with highest honors from the University of Tulsa College of Law, where he served as staff editor of Tulsa Law Review and director of the Board of Advocates, as well as vice president of the Public Interest Board, a student-run organization dedicated to fostering community service, public service, and pro bono work among law students throughout their legal education. He also was named to the Order of the Barristers, earned a CALI Award for academic excellence in Contracts, was presented with the Outstanding Trial Brief Award at the 2023 South Texas Mock Trial Challenge, and worked as a legal intern for the Rogers County (OK) District Attorney's Office.

The Oklahoma native also holds an associate's degree from Tulsa Community College and a bachelor's degree in psychology from Northeastern State University.

Sean's prior career experience includes working in various sales and distribution roles for Tulsa-based QuikTrip for more than four years while pursuing his two undergraduate degrees.
