Overview

Jennie Mook is a trial and appellate lawyer whose practice encompasses a range of business and corporate litigation, including contract disputes, complex business litigation, class actions, antitrust, unfair competition, and trade regulations disputes before state and federal trial and appellate courts, administrative proceedings and hearings, and arbitrations. A portion of Jennie's practice is also devoted to labor and employment issues as well as oil and gas disputes. Specifically, Jennie has experience representing management exclusively in all aspects of dispute resolution arising from the employer-employee relationship, including controversies arising under the Fair Labor Standards Act and claims of discrimination, harassment, retaliation, wrongful termination. She also draws on her background in natural resources and environmental science to advise clients on a broad range of transactional and litigation matters in oil and gas law, renewable energy, and environmental compliance.

During her undergraduate studies at the University of Oklahoma, Jennie earned three bachelors' degrees in four years in zoology, environmental studies, and psychology. She went on to work in the fields of wildlife biology and environmental science for years, moving around the country to work with organizations such as the National Park Service and the U.S. Department of Forestry.

Jennie graduated with highest honors from the University of Oklahoma College of Law in 2021. While pursuing her Juris Doctor, she served as an articles editor for the Oklahoma Law Review and as a judicial extern for the Honorable Robert E. Bacharach of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit, was named to the Order of the Coif and National Order of Scribes, and received six American Jurisprudence Awards. Jennie was also a recipient of numerous scholarships and honors, including the Comfort Scholarship, the Oklahoma Bar Foundation Fellowship, and the Holloway Scholarship recognizing academic excellence and leadership. Prior to graduating, she held leadership positions
